LawNY Celebrates 50 Years of Advocacy, Equality, & Access to the Justice System

The start of 2018 marks our 50th year serving the Monroe County community. In 1968, the Monroe County Bar Association (MCBA), in collaboration with Action for a Better Community, formed the Monroe County Legal Assistance Center (MCLAC). Once a storefront location, LawNY® now provides services in collaboration with other legal service providers at the Telesca Center for Justice. The once handful of staff members has grown to nearly 50 in our Rochester Office alone, serving over 4,000 clients per year.

This blog post is to commemorate 50 years of advocacy efforts as well as 50 years fighting for equality and access to the justice system for those who otherwise would not be able to afford it. Check out some headlines the Rochester Office has made since 1968! Below you will also find a schedule of events for how we are celebrating our 50th Anniversary throughout the year.

A Look into the Past

Legal Assistance has a unique role in the county

Letters

AS THE PRESIDENT of the Monroe County Bar Association, I am writing to inform the community of the uniquely important role that the Monroe County Legal Assistance Corporation (MCLAC) serves, with the hope that the County of Monroe will reverse its recent decision to exclude MCLAC from its 1977 budget.

The MCLAC was established in 1968 to furnish legal services to low-income people in civil matters only. It is the only office of its kind in Monroe County.

Unfortunately, it is sometimes confused with the Monroe County Public Defender's Office and the Legal Aid Society. The Public Defender's Office provides legal services to low-income people in criminal matters and the Legal Aid Society provides legal services to people primarily in Family Law matters.

During the eight years of its existence, MCLAC has provided extensive legal services to over 15,000 low-income people in a variety of areas, including housing, public assistance, civil rights, employment discrimination, unemployment compensation, of people in government and their salaries and free-loading pensions.

In our county we've had to let go quite a few employees, and no salary increases. Why should federal government be different?

I'M IN RECEIPT of a letter from my congressional representative Barber Conable, dated Jan. 16, and I quote his remarks relative to the pay increases in question: "I wrote to the President, strongly opposing the initial proposals as excessive."

Under the present executive congressional pay system, it is possible for presidential recommendations to take effect without approval by Congress. I consider this an evasion of congressional responsibility and have consistently opposed this method of dealing with this issue.

"I believe Congress should be required to vote on any pay increase and that such action should be effective after the next election, so that candidates may seek office with a full awareness of the emoluments to be received."

Jan. 19). The first step must be to inform people that such problems exist now and could get worse.

I particularly liked the suggestion of the National Commission on Supplies and Shortages which urged more recycling and removal of depletion allowances. Both of these measures can reduce waste of our limited natural resources.

The report also called for "more effective consideration of complex and interrelated policy issues" involving resources. One of these must be an awareness that the U.S. population is growing and that this aggravates our problems with resource supply.

Our population is growing now and will continue even with our low birthrate as long as we have so much illegal and legal immigration. Zero population growth is essential for a responsible natural resources policy and many other reasons.

Published by the Democrat and Chronicle on Sunday January 30, 1977. Justin Vigdor, President of the Monroe County Bar Association at the time, voices his support for LawNY® (then Monroe County Legal Assistance Center- MCLAC). He points out that during the 8 years in which MCLAC had been open, we had already managed to assist over 15,000 low income New Yorkers. Mr. Vigdor states that MCLAC provides access to the justice system for low-income people "without lawlessness and without violence that might otherwise spring from frustration, helplessness and futility felt by otherwise disenfranchised people."

Lou Prieto stands as fierce ally for low-income people seeking justice

There are a few people in our community who make a big difference but who don't get the recognition they deserve. They don't seek money, instead they just want to make things better for those they care about. Lou Prieto, the attorney who heads the Monroe County Legal Assistance Center, is one of them.

LOU PRIETO HEADS THE MONROE COUNTY LEGAL ASSISTANCE CENTER IN ROCHESTER.

Lou has devoted his career as a lawyer to serving those in the most need. First with the Legal Aid Society in New York City and now for more than 27 years with MCLAC. MCLAC provides free civil legal representation to low-income people. Lou came to Rochester in 1991 to head MCLAC's housing unit because of the office's reputation for excellent legal work and at the urging of his close college friend, the late Charles R. Archer Gaber Dubinski, who told Lou on the spot that Rochester would be a great city for him. Lou has strengthened the legal work of the MCLAC housing unit. Family has always meant a lot to Lou. When he commuted his mother to move from New York City to Rochester, Lou found her an apartment in the building across the street from his office. Almost every day until her death, Lou took his lunch across the street to eat with his mom. Lou is a gentle man but a fierce competitor in the courtroom, an advocate, continuing to everything he does. His Cuban heritage means a great deal to him. He remembers what it was like for his family to be turned down for housing because of their Spanish accents. He remembers being blamed for things in school that he didn't do because at age 6 he couldn't speak English and his teacher couldn't speak Spanish. It is no accident that his office, with his leadership and assistance in doing what is right, is one of the best legal services offices in the country. Hardly trying to correct injustices. It is a result of the leadership of a man who decided that he needs to live his life conscientiously with his own beliefs in fairness and equality.

Hetherington, at the time Empire Justice Center's Chief Counsel, highlights Lou Prieto's relentless advocacy efforts throughout the years. Mr. Prieto came to Rochester in 1991 to head LawNY's Housing Unit. He served as the Rochester Office's Managing Attorney until 2015. In the article, Mr. Prieto discusses how important his Cuban heritage is to him and how it affected his life growing up in America.

Published by the Democrat and Chronicle on Sunday, July 8, 2007. Jason Hoge, Staff Attorney at LawNY<sup>2</sup>, describes LawNY<sup>2</sup>'s collaboration with the grassroots organization Judicial Process Commission to create the Re-Entry Project. LawNY<sup>2</sup>'s Re-Entry unit has been practicing since 2006, helping to remove barriers to employment and housing that those with a criminal record often face when seeking to reintegrate into society after incarceration.

Giving people a second chance to join society ... profits the community.

Nearly 2 million Americans are held in state and federal prisons with 60 percent due for release over the next several years. Of the 600,000 people released every year, one-third will be reincarcerated within three years. President Bush commented on this growing dilemma in his 2004 State of the Union address "I ask you to consider another group of Americans in need of help. This year, almost 700,000 inmates will be released from prison back into society. We know from long experience that if they can't find work, or a home, or help, they are much more likely to recommit crime and return to prisons. ... America is the land of second chances, and when the gates of the prison open, the path ahead should lead to a better life." To address this issue, in 2006 the Monroe County Legal Assistance Center, a nonprofit legal service provider to low-income persons, and the Judicial Process Commission, a grassroots community service provider started the Re-Entry Project, an innovative community collaboration. The Re-Entry Project helps individuals returning to our community from incarceration and those who have never been incarcerated but struggle daily to overcome the stigma of criminal records. The Re-Entry Project helps remove the legal and social barriers that people with criminal records face when seeking a fresh start. These barriers are counterproductive to successful re-entry into our community and often lead to new criminal activity and eventual reincarceration. Over the past year, the Re-Entry Project has helped well over 500 people correct inaccuracies in their criminal records for the purpose of obtaining employment, work permits and professional licenses. In addition, the project helps employers understand the laws pertaining to hiring people with criminal records. The project also provides legal remedies, such as Certificates of Good Conduct, to lessen the detrimental effects of a criminal record on employment and housing. Giving people a second chance to join society as working and productive members profits the community. But providing the path that leads to a better life, as called for by the president, requires the involvement of our entire community. The Re-Entry Project is one model for successfully helping people with criminal records, a model that may be replicated across the country.

Laurie Lambrix, currently LawNY's Regional Deputy Director of Litigation, is honored for winning the New York State Bar Association's 2005 Haywood Burns Award in recognition of her advocacy work with LawNY since 1990. The award was named in honor of Haywood Burns, a civil rights lawyer who worked with Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and activist Angela Davis before dying in a car accident in 1996. Ms. Lambrix has been with LawNY for 28 years, spending most of her time representing victims of housing discrimination for LawNY's Fair Housing Project.

Laurie M. Lambrix was 15 when the attorney general died in 1971. Lambrix had a crush on a cousin in the law. "It was the first time that I saw justice in my own country," Lambrix said. "I had always been interested in issues of social justice, and as my mind grew, a law degree would help me address some of those issues."

Lambrix, who represents victims of housing discrimination as senior attorney of the non-profit Monroe County Legal Assistance Center, will travel to New York City next week to receive an award that honors a lawyer who dedicated his or her life to public service.

The New York State Bar Association will present to Lambrix its 2005 Haywood Burns Award, named for a civil rights lawyer who also worked with the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and activist Lambrix has devoted herself to fighting discrimination housing practices, said Stanley R. Zingales, president of the Women's Bar Association of New York, which nominated her.

"The money really wasn't an issue for her," Lambrix said. "She just didn't think she could live there."

Legal services unite at Four Corners

U.S. District Judge Michael Telesca commemorated his 25th anniversary on Monday, December 28, 2009. The article describes U.S. District Judge Telesca's dedication to serving low-income individuals in Monroe County throughout his career.

As a boy, Telesca could picture in his mind the copiers of the Rochester newspapers disseminating the news to the subscribers of the area of West Hill in the district.

"The stories were shared with people from the area," he said. "It was the biggest thing I saw."

Now, the same stories are shared with the building of the same center. He said that this year of a successful fundraising campaign, the Telesca Center for Justice — formerly the Four Corners Building — brings the Monroe County Bar Association under the same roof as day legal agencies that provide legal services to low-income residents.

"The fact that it brings day legal services to one building," Telesca said. "It's something in the only word I can think of."
